

Top 5 Things We'd Like to See in 2011 Dining

by James Mulcahy

2. Cambodian and Filipino Cuisine: New York is a melting pot, and you can get pretty much any cuisine at any time. Except Cambodian. With the exception of a few places (including the expanding Num Pang sandwich shop), kroeung (a Cambodian herb and spice blend) is sorely lacking around town. And Filipino cuisine? Unless you want to make the trek to Purple Yam or are lucky enough to snag a seat at the Maharlika pop-up, you can pretty much forget it. There is definitely a crowd hungry for this chow, now we just need some restaurants to deliver.