NUM PANG

Beyond Just Sandwiches

Num Pang has been bringing its Cambodian-inspired sandwiches to the Flatiron District since February.

What's unique about the new, 30-seat spot versus Num Pang's other two locations is that it also offers rice bowls and noodle dishes.

Co-owner Ben Daitz said he and restaurant partner Ratha Chaupoly know how to make more than just sandwiches, and the larger size of the Flatiron location allows for extra offerings as well.

Mr. Daitz recommends the grilled pork steak rice bowl, which can be made with either jasmine or brown rice and comes with seasonable vegetables ($9.75).

The grilled pork steak noodle dish comes with chilled vermicelli, romaine, sprouts, herbs, eggs, fried shallots, crushed peanuts and house dressing ($9.75).

And of course, this Num Pang offers its well-known, delicious sandwiches on fresh semolina baguettes. Customers can try the pulled duroc pork ($8.25), the coconut tiger shrimp ($8.75) or the roasted cauliflower ($7.50).

The location has the look of an old train station waiting area; layers have been removed to show the original tile of the space for the restaurant.
