

BEST OF gothamist

The 13 Best Sandwiches In NYC

The sandwich is the greatest culinary invention of all time. Bread? Excellent. Meat? Also great. Cheese? Stellar. Condiments? Fantastic. Portable? Hell yes. Though a shoddy, soggy sandwich is a sad thing indeed, one of these well-made babies is a marvel to behold, and proof that alleged inventor John Montagu, 4th Earl of Sandwich, should be elevated to sainthood. Here are our favorite sandwiches in the city, not counting the ones we procure from our local bodega after one too many beers; we know you'll leave yours in the comments.

Via Facebook

FIVE-SPICE GLAZED PORK BELLY AT NUM PANG: Sandwich chain Num Pang knows what it's doing when it comes to cooking up tender, melt-in-your mouth, fatty pork. This $8.75 concoction, served on a banh mi-style bun, comes thick with the aforementioned pork, along with a sweet-and-salty pickled Asian pear that cuts through some of the fat and expertly mixes with the meat's flavor. Add some savory pickled vegetables in the mix, and you've got yourself a solid sandwich bouquet.

Num Pang has a number of locations in Manhattan, including stalls at Hudson Eats in Battery Park City and at Chelsea Market. Visit numpangnyc.com for details.